PRE-OFFER, DISABILITY-RELATED QUESTIONS: DOS AND DON'TS

Title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) limits an employer's ability to ask disability-related questions or to require medical examinations at three stages of employment: pre-job offer, post-job offer, and during employment. This publication provides information regarding the limitations on disability-related questions at the pre-offer stage. This stage includes job applications and job interviews.

What is a disability-related question?

A disability-related question is a question that is likely to elicit information about a disability. On the other hand, if there are many possible answers to a question and only some of those answers would contain disability-related information, that question is not disability-related.

What questions can employers ask at the pre-offer stage?

In general, employers cannot ask disability-related questions at the pre-offer stage. This means that employers cannot directly ask whether an applicant has a particular disability. It also means that employers cannot ask questions that are closely related to disability.

Why does the ADA prohibit pre-offer disability-related questions?

In the past, some employment applications and interviewers requested information about an applicant's physical and/or mental condition. This information was often used to exclude applicants with disabilities before their ability to perform the job was even evaluated. As a result, Congress established a process within the ADA to isolate an employer's consideration of an applicant's non-medical qualifications from any consideration of the applicant's medical condition.
